TIPS AND TRICKS

Improve your skills on the water with practical fishing tips for freshwater and saltwater anglers. Learn how to find fish, choose the right tackle, and adjust your approach to changing conditions.

Saltwater Fishing

Picking the Tides
Tide is a major factor in saltwater fishing. High tide means more water, which can help you reach more fish. Low tide means less water, which can make it harder to reach the same fish. Learn how to pick the right tide for your target species and fishing style.

Picking the Weather
Weather can make or break a fishing trip. Windy weather can make it hard to cast and retrieve. Rainy weather can make it hard to see the fish. Learn how to pick the right weather for your target species and fishing style.

Picking the Time of Day
Different species of fish are more active at different times of the day. Some are more active in the morning, some in the afternoon, and some at night. Learn how to pick the right time of day for your target species and fishing style.

Picking the Structure
Fish like to hang out around structures like rocks, piers, and docks. These structures provide them with shelter and a place to hide. Learn how to pick the right structure for your target species and fishing style.

Freshwater Fishing

Target Cover
Fish like to hide in cover like trees, bushes, and rocks. This cover provides them with shelter and a place to hide. Learn how to pick the right cover for your target species and fishing style.

Adjust Your Depth
Different species of fish live at different depths. Some are more active near the surface, while others are more active near the bottom. Learn how to adjust your depth for your target species and fishing style.

Cold Water
Cold water fish are more active in cooler temperatures. They like to stay near the bottom where the water is cooler. Learn how to pick the right spot for your target species and fishing style.

Fish Low-Light Hours
Many species of fish are more active during low-light hours, such as dawn and dusk. This is when they are most likely to bite. Learn how to pick the right time for your target species and fishing style.
